

QUESTION NOW UP TO MASONS

MUST SACRIFICE PRINCIPLES OR LOSE SEASON'S WORK.

HAVE TWO DAYS TO DECIDE

Janesville Machine Co. Decides To Build $45,000 Warehouse of Concrete If Masons Can Not Be Secured.

Unless the union, masons of this city, now out on a strike for higher wages and shorter hours, come to an agreement with the contractors, within two days, they will not have an opportunity to work on the new $45,000 warehouse of the Janesville Machine Company, which, according to statements made by officials of the company this morning, must be started immediately. If masons can not be secured, the building will be constructed of concrete. This action, together with the consequent effect on other new buildings contemplated, puts the question of principles or a season's work up to the masons.

For over a month the Machine Company has been delaying the awarding of the contract in the hope that labor conditions would be adjusted. Plans for the new building, a summary of which has already been given in these columns, call for brick and this is the material that the company prefers but as the building must be started at once, and masons can not be secured, contractors have been asked to submit bids for concrete construction.

Seven bids for concrete construction and two for brick are now in the hands of the company's officials and the contract will be awarded within two days or three at the outside. The two bids for brick, however, have the preference, and if an agreement is reached between the masons and the contractors in the time specified, the latter will undoubtedly win out.

The company although it plain that no further delay makes it plain as it is absolutely necessary in view of increased business, to have the warehouse ready for use this fall. It was hoped to have the work started early this spring but this plan could not be carried out on account of the strike. Although the change from brick to concrete construction would be a radical one except for a change in the material, it would not affect the plan, which call for a three story and basement structure, fireproof and containing 35,000 square feet of floor space.

Just what the masons will do about the matter is not known. In itself alone, the addition to the Machine Company's plant represents almost a season's work for the local masons. Should the company choose concrete as material, other concerns which at the present time are delaying work for the same reason, may decide to adopt a similar course. The Rock River Machine Company, the Shortell Company and several other private parties expect to build this summer and it is understood may change to concrete if masons can not be secured.

That the effect on the strikers will be deeply felt can not be denied. The masons' season depends a great deal on the weather and a day lost at the beginning of the year, especially when the season will see more building than any previous one, can not be made up as in other trades when the men can work all winter and catch up on the production.

It is understood that the same difficulty that prevented the early adjustment of the plumbers' strike confronts the masons, that of the eight hour day. Without exception, the manufacturers and employers of labor in Janesville are opposed to the eight hour day and are backing the contractors in their fight. They regard it as impracticable, wasteful and unnecessary in a town of this size whatever may be its advantages in large cities.

ANOTHER PIONEER RESIDENT REMOVED

Sherman B. Phelps, Who Came To Rock County in 1849, Died at His Home Yesterday.

Sherman B. Phelps, one of the early residents of Janesville and at the age of seventy-five years, at three o'clock yesterday afternoon at his home, 1109 Sharon street, at the age of seventy-five years. The agent had been ailing for the past three months and was confined to his bed three weeks. Medina, Ohio, was his birthplace, on April 22, 1835. At the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted in the Sixteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers and served as a corporal throughout the war. He has made his home in this city for forty-two years, residing forty years at the home on Sharon street. His marriage to Ellen J. Mason occurred on May 30, 1858 and two years ago they celebrated the anniversary of their golden wedding. FAIR AUDIENCE FOR "THE GREAT DIVIDE"

William Vaughn Moody's Drama Presented Here Again By Good Company Last Evening.

"The Great Divide," William Vaughn Moody's drama of conflict between culture and refinement and the primitive and elemental was given a second presentation before a good sized and appreciative audience at the Myers theatre last evening. Most men and this melodrama in the development following the first act rather harrowing—probably because there is a lesson for them that is driving home with a well chosen hammer. The Brooks did very well with the character of "Ruth Jordan," though in the intensely emotional moments she did not always hold the undivided sympathy of her audience as did her predecessor in the role, Edgar Jones in the trying characterization of the drunken ruffian in the first act was not quite so convincing as in the subsequent epochs of his regeneration, but the play was well taken.

Need No Soap With This Water.
The water in Lake Van, in Asiatic Turkey, which is about 60 miles long by from 20 to 30 miles wide, is so strongly impregnated with potash that the residents along its shores use it to wash clothing without the use of soap.

AN AKRON MAN.

MR. WILLIAM F. STEPHEN.
Mr. William F. Stephen, 701 Coburn St., Akron, Ohio, writes:

"I have been troubled for several years with catarrh of the stomach. I have used different patent medicines to no effect whatever, and have doctored considerably with family doctors. Sometimes his treatment would relieve me for a few weeks, but would eventually have to go back to him, and that had kept up for several years."

"I was advised to use Peruna, and have taken three bottles. Never felt so good in my life. Am going to continue using it. Wouldn't be without it in the house. I will gladly recommend it to any one afflicted with catarrh of stomach, or stomach trouble of any kind."

"The above is an oft-repeated story. Troubled for years with chronic catarrh, I tried different remedies and doctors to no avail. Instant relief was given by friends. Instant relief was given by friends. Instant relief was given by friends."

Peruna promptly produces an appetite, corrects digestion and relieves stomach difficulties that have resisted other treatment.

Follow Me

By F. A. MITCHEL
Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

I am known as Mesereau the climber. The guide upon whom I always relied when climbing in the region about Interlake was Carl Weber, a German Swabian. He was brave and faithful, and I became very much attached to him. I had him with me in every climb I made out of the Interlake to the summit of the Waterhorn, Elger, Monk and Jungfrau. And frequently when I attempted ascents in the southern Alps I would send for him to come to me. He always responded with alacrity, and I knew that he would rather guide me than any one else.

After an adventure we had on the Matterhorn his affection for me was greatly enhanced. We were alone on the side of that razor backed peak when, walking on a snow edge, I fell. Weber, knowing that the only way to prevent his being dragged after me was to throw himself on the opposite side, did so. There we hung, each dangling over a precipice divided by a sharp edge of rock. Unfortunately Weber's right arm had become caught in a loop of the rope and a bone snapped.

"Herr," he called, "I cannot pull myself up. My arm is broken. I think there is snow beneath you. The rope must be cut. You will fall a short distance and may not be hurt."

"And you?"
"I shall go down a thousand feet." "Then the rope shall not be cut. I will go up hand over hand and, straddling the edge, will pull you up."

This I did. I expected Weber would be overjoyed at his escape, but he did not appear to be so much pleased as one would suppose.

"Ach!" he exclaimed bitterly. "I shall never be the same man after having been saved by one I have guided."

This was the last time Weber and I ever climbed together. Not long afterward, while conducting a party of Englishmen to the summit of Mont Blanc, the snow gave way beneath them, an avalanche was started, and they were all lost. Weber's body was found buried under thirty feet of snow, head down, his legs sticking out of the grip of his icy hand.

On hearing of my faithful guide's death I resolved that I would never climb without Weber. This was partly because to climb without Weber would not be enjoyable and partly because his death caused me to realize that there is no safety in Alpine climbing even with the best guide. I refrained for two years; then, business calling me to Europe, I found myself near my beloved Switzerland in the summer season and ran down to Chamounix for a visit. Unluckily for my resolution while at Chamounix I fell in with a party about to climb to the summit of Mont Blanc.

I stood looking up one morning at the magnificent sight of the mountain on which Weber had met his death, greatly tempted to make one more ascent. I wondered if the soul of my guide, freed from flesh and the attraction of gravitation, was sitting over the cliffs, sailing through the vast splits between the peaks, revealing in being able to go like a bird wherever it pleased. Then came to me a superstitious dread lest if I wait I should meet with misfortune.

I determined to adhere to my resolution to climb no more, when one of the party began to talk with me about the trip and when I spoke of remaining below manifested some surprise that such a "noted climber" should be content to see others go without going himself. This decided me to be one of the party.

We made the Grand Mulets, the hut built for a halfway stop, by evening and started the next morning under a cloudy sky for the summit. Within an hour we were enveloped in by far the worst snowstorm I had ever encountered in any of my ascents. It was like an American blizzard, the snow falling in miniature spirals and deepening so rapidly that we soon found moving in any direction difficult.

I have never before seen Alpine guides thoroughly frightened. "We must return to the Grand Mulets," they all said, and, turning, we began to descend. But how could we descend able to see a distance of ten yards? If we stopped we would be overcome by the snow. If we proceeded we would likely go into a crevice or over a precipice. And what was the use of moving when we did not know which way to move?

I went out on a circumscribed exploring trip and stood apart from the rest, awed by the whirling snow, when I heard a voice—a voice familiar, never to be forgotten.

"Herr, folgen sie mich!" (Sir, follow me.)

At that moment I saw through the snowflakes a vague form a short distance before me. Calling to the others to come, I followed it. They trailed in, behind me. There were lights above and chains below, but we walked near them, without danger. And there before us, flickering, now fading, disappearing, but always reappearing, was the figure.

Within twenty minutes we reached the Grand Mulets.

Who or what led us to safety I leave for the reader to surmise.

Possibly in Novels.

Court Plaster a Preventive of Colds.

One of the grand opera stars who is just on the point of sailing for Europe is boasting about his remarkable cold. While he speaks remarkably not once this season has he had trouble with nose or throat. And then, if he is an expansive mood, he may tell you why. His preventive has been court plaster applied externally. Every night upon retiring he has pasted strips of plaster over his mouth, and in consequence has breathed perfectly through his nose. In his opinion it is improper breathing that causes most of the maladies incident to singers. Whether he has conveyed any of his colleagues to his way of thinking does not say, but there is no doubt that the method possesses a commendable simplicity.

High Grade Pianos

High Grade Pianos

O, What a Difference Between the Genuine High Grade Piano and the Inferior So-Called High Grade Piano?

GENUINE HIGH GRADE PIANOS

Are constructed on right principles which produce a very even scale.

IRON PLATE, cast extra strong, insuring great durability.

SOUNDING BOARD of the very best mountain spruce, thoroughly kiln dried.

BACK—The back is formed with six heavy double ply hardwood upright posts, nicely finished.

ACTION—The very best repeating pivot action with continuous flange, instead of wood.

HAMMERS—Superior quality of felt, also throughout the entire action, insures against tone becoming tinny.

WIRE—The best quality of Pochman imported steel wire is used. Causes the piano to stand long in tune.

KEYS—Very best quality ivory and ebony; will not warp or stick.

FINISH—Only the best Zanzibar varnish is used, applying 6 coats thoroughly, rubbed in and hand polished.

This is the way the genuine high-grade Newman Bros. pianos are made.

Would you not like to have one set in your parlor? Just say the word and we will do the rest.

Nott keeps the above genuine high-grade pianos for sale.

INFERIOR SO-CALLED HIGH GRADE PIANOS

Are poorly constructed, which give an uneven scale.

IRON PLATE light in weight, liable to crack at any time.

SOUNDING BOARD fair quality, not well seasoned, liable to check.

BACK—The back is formed with five single ply upright posts. Does not stand so well in tune.

ACTION—Good medium grade flange instead of brass; keys liable to stick.

HAMMERS—A fair quality of felt, not so durable, and tone in time will get tinny.

WIRE—Cheap American wire is used. Cheap wire stretches and causes the piano to get out of tune easily.

KEYS—Poor quality ivory or celluloid is used.

FINISH—Fair quality of varnish and only 3 or 4 coats, and nobody knows the difference until it is too late.

This is the way the inferior so-called high-grade pianos are made.

Called by various names. Would you care to buy one? They are for sale, look out for them.

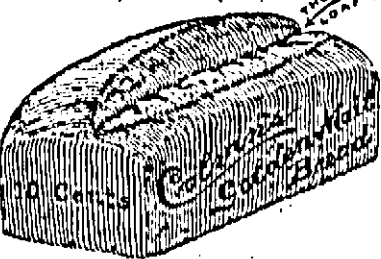

Nott does not keep the inferior so-called pianos for sale.

The Optimist's Corner Daily Helps to Health and Happiness

By GEORGE F. BUTLER, A. M., M. D.

A most trying time for the sick person is between the hours of one and four in the morning. Vitality becomes diminished and the strength should therefore be fortified as far as possible with some strong food, either soup, or egg, or milk, about midnight. The nurse should always make the meals look as tempting as possible with snowy serviettes, sparkling glass, and always a flower or two in a dainty vase. Even a spray of mignonette will often work wonders in interesting and pleasing the patient. These small details are too often omitted by the nurse on the plea of not having time to see to them, but they ought to be considered as essential to the progress of the patient as the medicine itself. Often they are more potent than this last. It is very certain, too, that the nurse who would find such details of her service irksome is no true nurse, and ought not to be entrusted with the care of a sick person. Further, it is a mistake to leave untouched food by a person's bedside in the hope that he will eat it later on. He will simply be disgusted with food altogether. Many sick people have a great craving for tea, and when this is the case the tea leaves should be infused in boiling milk instead of water, thus forming a very strengthening and refreshing beverage.

PASSION PLAY OPENS ITS FIRST PERFORMANCE

Oberammergau—The merry off all tourists on the continent this summer will be the great passion play as presented in the quaint little Bavarian hamlet of Oberammergau. This play which is presented only once every decade, will be played from May 16 to September 25.

There will be not be many changes in the principal characters this year, the part of Christ being taken by Anton Lang. Most of the other parts will be taken by the same actors who performed in 1900, with the exception of the Virgin Mary. It is the tradition of the village that the virgin must be represented by a woman between 20 and 30 years of age, and therefore the part is never played twice by the same person. Ottilie Zwick will be the virgin for 1910. Many Americans will witness this representation during the coming summer and have their devotional feelings stimulated and their religious sense quickened by the solemn dignity of the drama there presented.

OKLAHOMA BOYS ON 2,000 MILE RIDE TO GREET COL. ROOSEVELT. Louis and Temple Abernathy, sons of United States Marshall Abernathy of Oklahoma. Picture was taken in Cincinnati during their trip.

Cincinnati, O.—The two small sons of United States Marshall John Abernathy, who are making a 2,000-mile horseback journey from Guthrie, Oklahoma, to New York to meet Colonel Roosevelt, are now several days out of this city. Despite bad weather they are making rapid progress, and expect to reach New York long before the ex-president arrives. The boys are Temple, aged six, and Louis, ten. They have journeyed over the whole south alone and are the pride of the southwest. They left Oklahoma City April 15, arriving in St. Louis 10 days later. They passed through here in a happy mood. They had no naps and trust to people along the way to direct them properly. Marshall Abernathy and Colonel Roosevelt are close friends. Abernathy won fame as a wolf catcher by "catching them alive." He has no fear of them, but they soon began to avoid him. Abernathy intended going abroad with Roosevelt.

The boys have been receiving royal welcome at all points along the route. There will be a celebration of a large part of Oklahoma when they return to Guthrie. It is expected that the return trip will also be made on horseback.

NEW ELECTRIC IRON

Automatic Cut-off Saves Current When It Is Not Needed.

Electricity has become the motive power for so many things nowadays that the average amount used by the average family whose home is supplied with it is considerable. Consequently any device which a saving can be made in this will be welcome. Two California men have designed an iron with an automatic cut-off by means of which current is cut off when the iron is in operation, and which is only a fraction of the time that it is connected, the saving is really worth while. The cut-off consists of a bar hinged in the handle of the iron, and by which the current may be switched on and off with the mere pressure of the hand. When the iron is to be used it should be grasped so that the switch bar is held in by the little finger or lower part of the hand. When through the pressure is released and the bar flies out again, thus establishing a cut-off which saves power that would otherwise cost money.

LONG AND SHORT HAUL.

The long and short haul, which is likely to become a part of the new railway law, will be heralded by many inland cities as a Godsend for the feeling has long prevailed that this class of cities were discriminated against by railroad companies.

The defense offered is, that water competition demands a rate which would mean great financial loss if enforced all along the line, a thin argument when the fact is considered that railroads parallel all the inland waterways and control the business.

The city of Saint Paul has long enjoyed a lower freight rate than many intermediate points and yet the upper Mississippi handles comparatively little freight.

The city of Chicago, 18 miles east of Dubuque, has a low rate, because of the river which is called a navigable stream, and yet which flows nothing larger than a launch.

One of the eastern railroads owned its own canal but finally built a road on the low path and steam took the place of horse, power, and the old canal boats soon became derelicts.

There is a deal of sentimental nonsense about transforming the waterways of the country to highways, and millions of money has been squandered in this direction. Water transportation is too slow and seldom used where railroads are available.

The manufacturing plants in Racine, Kenosha and other lake cities receive supplies and ship their output by rail because cheaper and more convenient. The Panama canal which is just now demanding so much money and attention is an enterprise of doubtful utility as will be discovered by the following statement from the Technical World magazine in answering the question.

Will the Panama Canal Pay?
"What shall it profit a Nation to squander more than a third of a billion dollars in digging an inter-oceanic canal when another Nation already has in successful operation a rival transportation line that can cut rates below the possibility of competition by the canal and still make a profit?"

"This is the conundrum that has confronted the people of the United States since January 1, 1907, when Mexico opened the Tehuantepec National Railway for traffic. It will continue to confront them so long as the railway remains in operation in spite of all the rhetoric that can be touched off in Congress or out of it.
"On paper, of course, water transportation can put the railroads out of business with one hand tied. It has been demonstrated beyond the possibility of successful contradiction again and yet again that a steamship, or a steamboat, or even a canal boat, can haul freight so much cheaper than a train that the latter can not even earn interest on its bonds. As a matter of prosaic history, however, it will be remembered that the railroads, even in their crude days of undevelopment, simply took all the traffic away from the canals, which had had some years the start of them, leaving the canal boats to rot and the canals themselves to degenerate into duck ponds.

"Ocean freight rates are worth on an average a dollar per ton per thousand miles. The ordinary freight steamship makes about ten miles an hour, or two hundred and fifty miles a day, thus requiring five days more to go by way of Panama, assuming the time of crossing both latitudes to be the same. It will take a steamer about one day to pass through the Panama Canal, while the cargo could be passed across Tehuantepec and loaded into another steamer in two days, leaving four days to the advantage of the Mexican route. The extra cost of the four days to a steamer with a five thousand-ton cargo to go by way of Panama would be $2,000; adding the canal tolls would bring the total up to $10,000.

"That this saving in actual cash by the Tehuantepec route is not merely an academic theory but a commercial reality has been demonstrated by more than three years of operation. The first demonstration was the diversion of a couple of hundred thousand tons of sugar per year that was formerly shipped from Hawaii by way of Cape Horn to New York and Philadelphia, saving more than thirty days' time. The directness of the Mexican route is shown by the fact that a cargo which left Hong Kong April 8, 1909, consigned by way of Tehuantepec was delivered in New York May 21, making the time in transit fifty-three days.—From 'Panama Canal's Rival'.

Water competition is no longer an argument for the railroads in defense of the long and short haul proposition, and if rates are too low at seaboard and lake points, they should be advanced.

PHYSICAL VALUATION.

The physical valuation of railroad property has long been the hobby of erratic reformers, and the new railroad bill, recently passed by the house is committed to the measure, that it is a pernicious feature will be demonstrated if it ever becomes a law.

The physical valuation of any corporate property is based on its earning power and dividend paying ability. During the panic of 1893-75 American railroads were in the hands of receivers, and at the present rate of state and federal regulation this experience is likely to be repeated at a no very distant date. The Wall Street Journal in discussing this absurd proposition says:

"The absurdity of a physical valuation in order to determine the true value of a railway property is that it must almost inevitably be based upon the value of the property as it appears under existing conditions. If roadbed is equipped with heavy steel rails and well balanced, if equipment is in good condition, and if first-class terminal facilities are handling business with efficiency, it is because the road is earning enough to justify keeping up these conditions.

"Real valuation, which finds its level in the severe competition of the stock market is based upon the management of the road and what that management produces in present earning power and in the promise of future earning power, upon present rates for passengers and freight, or upon the presumption that reasonable rates can be obtained in the future.

"If arbitrary rate makers are to step in and cut these rates to what they, in their superior wisdom, consider to be more equitable to the shipper, then the earning power of the road is likely to decline, its equipment and plant will deteriorate, its securities will begin to fall in the market, and in the hands of a receiver its next 'physical valuation' will be found very different from the first one.

"The arbitrary fixing of rates which would wipe out dividends would reduce the actual value of a railroad property pretty nearly to the level of old junk. A physical valuation which put either the plant or the equipment of an insolvent road upon a par with those of a solvent road would be a misleading basis for the investor, if an investor could be found for such a property.

"The meaning of all this is that 'physical valuation' is worthless as a basis for fixing rates. If a road is earning excessive dividends, this fact might possibly be a factor in deciding in favor of a reduction of rates to non-competing points. The arbitrary attempt to strike at the ownership of such a property, by marking down its value or impairing its earning power, would be a blow at the scattered body of shareholders rather than at the management.

"If such a blow is to be struck, it should be struck manfully upon existing data and not upon the cowardly plan of 'physical valuation' which is only another way of saying to a man if he does not accept the valuation put upon his property by outsiders, they will take means to force it down to that value. The real valuation of a railway system depends upon the quality of its management as much as the cost of its rails and ties, so long as that management is not fettered in developing the property.
"It looks as if 'physical valuation' were either a form of condescension or a myth."

Loyalty to Taft and the administration was the slogan which won the first victory in Ohio yesterday and it will win in Iowa, Wisconsin and half a dozen other states represented by insurgent congressmen. The rank and file of the republican party is not carried away with the doctrine of disloyalty.

Universal brotherhood is illustrated by the grief and sorrow which is shown throughout the civilized globe at the death of King Edward of England. The United States has lost a warm friend in the death of England's monarch and mourns with its English brethren.

If that fall of the comet means it is going to get warm why let us have the whole tale hit us. This cold wave is certainly not what the world at large expected and even the presence of the laughing gas does not make many people smile as they care for their families.

President Taft apparently has the confidence of the republican senators at last and his plans will be carried out despite the bickering of the cohorts of Chautauqua apostles who call themselves republicans for revenue only.

State Senator Fairchild will make friends wherever he goes. His loyalty to Taft and the republican party is introduction enough for any man and with that he adds a strong personality that wins confidence of the people.

Every day lost now in the spring building can not be made up at the other end of the season and the men who are hindering the construction of new buildings would do well to consider it.

Old Dame Nature is just plating to begin her work of making the flowers, trees and garden grow and if warm weather ever comes she is ready to start work with a vengeance.

Heart to Heart Talks.

By EDWIN A. NYE.

THE MAN ON THE JOB.

The general manager of the road swung off the rear platform of his private car and walked back to the siding where a gang of section men were at work.

"Hello, Mike!" said the general manager, who knew every section foreman on the line by his first name. "What's the matter here?"

Using forceful language, the foreman criticized the methods of the construction department. He carefully explained the difficulty and showed how somebody higher up was to blame.

The manager listened closely, putting a few well directed questions. When he got back to his car he made some private memoranda. In a few days an order went forth from the manager's office embodying Mike's ideas of reform in the construction department. It worked admirably.

Said the manager to a friend, "If you want to get at the bottom of railroad, find out what the man in the small job knows."

Which is true not only in railroad, but in every other line. The man on the job knows.

One of the most successful managing editors I ever knew organized a weekly session of all the men in his department. He called these meetings "brain throbs." Every man was absolutely free to talk, and the suggestion of the editor was given as much attention as that of the city editor or the telegraph editor.

The manager got the "brain throbs" of the man on the job.
"I can learn more from my clerks than from my department heads," said a great Chicago merchant. "The clerks come in direct contact with the public. They know what the customer wants and what his complaints are."

The man at the bottom knows. The shrewd politician manager who wants to know the drift of public opinion in his state pays scant attention to the editorial utterances of the big city newspaper. He wants to know what the "country editor"—the editor of the newspaper in small city, in town and village—is saying about the issue.

The country editor knows. The rule holds good in every department of life. And the wise employer of men and women does not regard them as mere machines. They are workers together with him.

Under our competitive system ideal relations between capital and labor are more or less difficult. The nearest approach to the ideal is that condition where the employer thoroughly trusts and freely consults his employees, where the employees fully trust and freely consult their employer.

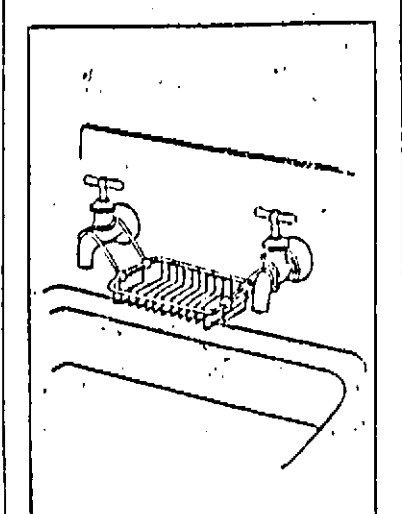

When I am sick I might endure it. If I could nurse my ill alone, but neighbors tell me how to cure it, and all my soul with grief.

while when you breathe, and another, your lungs seem full of carpet tacks, and off you wish some kindly brother would hit you with a battle-axe. And while I howled around in sorrow, one neighbor said: "Drink lemonade, and you'll be prancing round tomorrow as chipper as a colt. I won't." Another said: "Mix lye and whiskey, and drink a gallon, smoking hot; in half an hour you'll feel so frisky, they'll have to hold you down. I won't." Another came, a bearded Druid, who through his snowy whiskers hissed: "Fill up with good embalming fluid, and you will be all right, I tell you." Oh, oftentimes I feel like thunder, my works seem always out of plumb; at such times, is it any wonder, I hate to see the neighbors come?

HANDY SOAPDISH

Wire Hangers Enable It to Be Put in Position Anywhere.

It is just a trifle, this soapdish holder designed by a New York man—but it is one of those trifes that is so convenient as to overshadow its best importance. Two single pieces of wire are bent so as to form double hooks at one end of the device and the other end is pivotally connected with the ends of the soapdish.

SOAP ALWAYS IN REACH.

By this means, with one of these hangers on each end of the dish, the latter may be hung between the spigots on either washstand or bathtub, the hooks catching the lips of the faucets. On a washstand there is usually room for a stationary soapdish of the ordinary type, and these hangers come in handy there only when there is no room to spare. In the bathtub, however, there is no place to keep the soap within reach unless one of these devices is used or unless it be allowed to remain in the water, which is not always desirable. Of course, such a dish is useful in the kitchen, too, where recent is at a premium.

Must Be Occupied.

A fire insurance policy on a dwelling becomes void if "the building be vacated or left unoccupied." That is, the insurance on a vacant dwelling can be kept in force, only by the owner keeping a watchman or caretaker constantly, or living on the premises. The fact that a tenant may move out without the knowledge or consent of the owner of the building makes no difference. As soon as it is vacated, insurance is suspended unless, as stated above, it is occupied temporarily by a watchman or caretaker.

Pig Houses of Cement.

Concrete construction in almost every line of farm buildings and for live stock, is proving one of the most valuable things in these modern times, especially so now that lumber costs so much more than formerly.

RIFLED POOR BOXES AT TWO CHURCHES

Bold Thief Got In His Work At St. Mary's and St. Patrick's Houses Of Worship Yesterday.

The poor-boxes at St. Mary's and St. Patrick's Catholic churches were broken open and relieved of their contents by some small-caliber and absolutely unprincipled thief yesterday afternoon. Chests containing candles for the altars were also pried open but the contents left untouched.

One of the sisters from St. Patrick's convent who entered the church about four o'clock heard a noise of someone moving about in the place and upon turning saw a young man about twenty years of age, rather short, smooth faced, and of rather prepossessing appearance step forward and kneel before the altar. Taking it for granted that the unusual sound which had first attracted her attention toward him had been caused by stumbling, the sister thought no more about the incident. She left the church not long thereafter and returned at six o'clock to find that the padlock fastenings on the poor and candle boxes had been pried off with a railroad spike which the thief had not taken the trouble to carry away with him.

The discovery that similar depredations had been committed at St. Mary's church was made this morning. There is no way of knowing how much money was carried away but it is supposed that there were goodly amounts in both instances. Messages were sent to Madison and Detroit by the local police department but no trace of the murderer has yet been found. It is believed that the same railroad spike was used in both instances and if it was, it is obvious that St. Patrick's church was the last place visited. In all likelihood the thief and his accomplice went to Janesville on the 5:15 southbound train and in which event the conductor may be able to furnish the officers with some working clue.

MAY MAKE PURCHASE OF WHOLE BUILDING

Janesville Lodge of the Loyal Order of Moose to Decide Matter on Thursday.

At the meeting of the Janesville Lodge of the Loyal Order of Moose on Thursday evening the question of purchasing the building formerly occupied by the Gazette Printing Company on North Main street is to be considered. The deal has been all but completed and awaits only the sanction of the lodge to close the deal. Several plans have been suggested for the remodeling of the interior which will be done immediately. One contemplates using the second and third floors of the building for the club rooms, gymnasium and lodge rooms and renting the first floor, and the other of occupying the whole building with bowling alleys in the basement. As the matter is one of importance, the committee having charge of the matter are urgent in their request that all members of the lodge be present on Thursday evening so that the matter may be definitely decided at that time. If the property is purchased the entire interior would be refurnished with hardwood floors and changes in partitions making it an up-to-date club house. The building has an outside stairway to the second and even the third floors, which would make it a great convenience for the members should it be decided to rent the lower floor.

HOMESEEKERS LEAVE DAILY FOR SOUTHERN CANADA AND ALSO THE WESTERN STATES

Land Agents Take Large Parties But Many Farmers Leave Singly To Inspect New Farming Country.

Three parties of home seekers from this city and vicinity, numbering in all about twenty-five, left last night and today for points in Canada, Mississippi and Montana. E. L. DIES SUDDENLY AT HIS OFFICE TODAY

William Henry Harrison Macleod Passed Away Shortly Before Noon Today.

William Henry Harrison Macleod, a resident of Janesville for the past sixty-three years, prominent in politics and one of the leading real estate dealers of the city, died shortly before noon today. His death was directly due to hardening of the arteries brought on by over exertion and he passed away before medical aid which was quickly summoned could do anything to aid him. Mr. Macleod was born in Boston, Massachusetts sixty-five years ago and came to Janesville with his parents when but two years of age. For many years he has been one of the leading retail cash dealers of the city and has been prominent in politics, being a strong supporter of Senator La Follette. Mr. Macleod was apparently as well as over this morning and transacted business down town just previous to returning to his office where death overtook him. Dr. Penber who was called, pronounced the death double that of the arteries, a trouble with which he had been threatened for some time past. He leaves a widow and one sister, Mrs. Fred Capelle to mourn his loss. The announcement of the funeral will be made later.

Infant Child.

Albert Victor, the fifteen-month-old child of Mr. and Mrs. George Macleod, 757 Logan street, died early this morning at the home of his parents. Two brothers and two sisters survive. Notice of the funeral will be given later.

TO GO AHEAD WITH THE IMPROVEMENTS

Street Railway Co. Receivers Are Well Satisfied With Action Taken By Common Council.

It is understood that the receivers for the Janesville Street Railway Co. have expressed themselves as well satisfied with the action taken by the common council in recalling the appeal to the railroad commission Monday evening and that they now stand ready to go ahead with their original plan of borrowing $10,000 and using the money for paying the traction company's share of projected street improvements and installing new rails and wiring. On South Main and Milwaukee streets the new rails will be laid in cement and the best heavy rails obtainable. Preparation will be made to carry out the plans simultaneously with the street improvements.

The rest of the schedule is: May 20, La Crosse to La. Crosse; May 20, La Crosse to Eau Claire; May 21, Eau Claire to Vaucluse; May 22, Vaucluse to Appleton; May 23, Appleton to Milwaukee. Harry Nowlan and the Phillips brothers took a party consisting of Peter J. Mount, Dr. H. W. Edden, Sheriff Scheibel, Frank Ryan, O. H. Olson, and Dr. W. H. What Asbestos Is.

Asbestos, that singular substance which can be carded like wool and formed into drop-proof cloth or paper, belongs to the horn-blende type of minerals, and in some respects forms a kind of link between the vegetable and animal kingdom. It is at once fibrous and crystalline, elastic and brittle, heavy as rock in the crude state, yet light as thistledown when mechanically treated.

Bigger Warships.

That the German government believes ships of war will be much bigger in the future is shown by the enlargement of the Kaiser Wilhelm canal, which is to be deepened at once to 56 feet, with provision for a later deepening, if necessary, to 46 feet. The width of the canal is to be doubled. The new dimensions of the locks will considerably exceed those of Panama.

Beware of Loose Speech.

Keep the tongue from unkindness. Words are sometimes wounds; not very deep wounds always, and yet they irritate. Speech is unkind sometimes, when there is no unkindness in the heart. So much the worse that unkindness is caused.

British East Africa.

British East Africa has a population estimated at 4,000,000. Of this number only about 1,500 to 2,000 are white. Indians and Arabs are put down at 12,000 to 15,000 and all the rest are members of the various native tribes.

Parental Blunder.

"I know it's ridiculous for me to powder my face so thickly," said the dashing brunette, "but my parents named me Pearl, and I've got to live up to the name."

Words and Thought.

Words are the notes of thought, and nothing more. Words are like sea shells on the shore; they show where the mind ends, and not how far it has been.—Bailey.

THE FOX

A Story of Mediaeval Italy

By LAWRENCE FOSTER

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

All over Italy there are towers or small castles that were in mediaeval times the strongholds of different factions, headed by a noble family.

There is a story of one of these castles on the banks of Lake Maggiore. The Asconti family once occupied this castle. There were intervals of warfare when the family lived peacefully on the top of the hill, feasting and dancing while their adherents tilled the soil or tended their flocks in the country about them. During one of these times in the desert of war a young soldier, Giovanni Caspi, on whom the head of the family lavished many favors, made love to Theresa Asconti. As soon as the baron heard of this affair he dismissed Caspi, for the young man was not of noble birth.

In time Giovanni Caspi became known in warfare as one of the boldest and most ingenious leaders. When he attacked a tower it was sure to fall. This was not because his men were more brave or stronger, but because their captain was full of arts by which he outwitted his enemies. Indeed, the Italians of those days were prone to accomplish their objects rather by their wits than by ordinary methods.

Now, the Asconti family belonged to the Ghibellines, one of the two prominent factions that contended for supremacy in Italy in those days, the other being the Guelphs. One of the Guelph leaders, named Blandora, whose castle was on Lake Lecce, hearing that Asconti was away from his castle with all his adherents, resolved to cross to Menaggio, pass through a defile leading to the east bank of Lake Maggiore, march up and around the north end of the lake and down on the west bank to the Asconti stronghold, hoping to occupy it during Asconti's absence.

One day Asconti was at Strezia, directly south of his castle, with a small portion of his force when Caspi appeared and rode up to him. Asconti frowned and asked him what he wished.

"To tell you that a Guelph force is marching northward on the other bank of the lake intending to come down through Locarno and occupy your castle."

"How do you know that?" asked Asconti.

"Because I saw them from an eminence."

There could be no reason for Caspi giving false information, so Asconti sent couriers in hot haste to the several portions of his force, some of whom were at a considerable distance, with orders that they should hasten to the castle. Then Asconti made a forced march himself in the same direction. Caspi asked permission to go with him and help him win a victory over those who were on the way to attack him, and Asconti reluctantly consented. So they rode on side by side.

"You will be within your gates," said Caspi, "before the Guelphs can surround the castle, but you have not fifty men with you, and your enemies number a thousand. Before the other portions of your army can reach you your ramparts will be stormed and taken."

"My hope is that my reinforcements will come in time."

"I hope so, too, but it may be well for you to think of some plan by which to hold your enemy in check in case you are left without support."

Asconti rode on moodily, occasionally turning to hurry his followers. When he came within sight of his castle he was relieved to see his banner still floating there. Pushing on, he entered with his hand and closed the gates. The sun was shining on the armor of the Guelphs, just leaving Locarno. They were not a dozen miles distant, and as yet no word had come from any other of the portions of Asconti's army. Asconti gave up hope.

"I have a plan that may save you," said Caspi.

"What is it?"

"I must have a reward if I succeed."

"My daughter's hand?"

"Yes."

Asconti considered for some time, then with evident reluctance consented. Caspi told him that he could do nothing without the command, and it was surrendered to him.

Then Caspi chose one on whom he could rely and told him to go to the Guelph leader and say that Giovanni Caspi was in the Ghibelline stronghold and in command. The message was delivered. Blandora started.

"Oh," he exclaimed, "if that fox is in there we must beware!"

From this point he marched slowly and cautiously, expecting at any moment that an army of Ghibellines would pour down out of some ravine and overpower him. But nothing unusual occurred. At last he reached a point where he could plainly see the castle. To his astonishment, the gates were open, no sentries were on the wall, and from within came sounds of revelry.

"A stratagem!" he exclaimed. "That wily Caspi has his men concealed within the walls. Should we enter the castle would be closed behind us, and we would all be murdered."

Blandora spent so much time trying to find a way to outwit "the fox" that one morning two divisions of Asconti's supports came, fell upon him and annihilated his army.

Then there was real feasting in the castle at the wedding of Giovanni and Theresa.

Just His Luck.

"That's just my luck! Here is an airship overhead, and I've got a stiff neck!"—Fulgensio Blandora.

The Ticklemouse

—and his Sleepyland Adventures

By Roy Rutherford Bailey with Davy and Dorfy

The Wishing Mouse

Part I.—The Trap.

It was late Sunday night, and the nursery was very still. The little clock struck twelve, and still Mr. Ticklemouse had not come.

The twins were too sound asleep to know how late it was getting, or they would have been worried for fear the cats had captured their dear mouse. But no sound was heard in their bedroom, save the tick of the clock—till suddenly there came a soft scratching beneath the big Persian rug. Something came up through a knothole in the floor and peeped its head out. But it was not Mr. Ticklemouse! It was smaller and more plump, and wore no clothes but a red bandanna sash and a Tam o' Shanter cap.

The little figure stared at the sleeping twins, then stood on one leg and began to whisper, "I wish . . . I wish . . ."

Davy and Dorfy sat up in bed and blinked at the tiny mouse. "Oh!" Dorfy laughed, as she slid out of bed and ran over to him. "You've shrunk so, Mr. Ticklemouse, I hardly knew you! Why, it isn't Mr. Ticklemouse, at all!" and she drew back in alarm.

"No," squeaked the mouse. "I'm little Willy Wishingmouse, children, and—Uncle Tick said I'd have to do for tonight."

"Well, I declare!" exclaimed Davy, shaking hands with Willy. "And did you tickle us awake? I didn't feel anything."

"No, I tickled you awake; I can't tickle worth a cent. Well, what shall we do tonight? Wouldn't you like to dwell?"

"Dwell?" The twins looked dumbfounded. "Yes, dwell—shrink—lose your size and be nice, twin mice."

"Oh, let's dwell us quick!"

Willy Wishingmouse stood on one leg and shut one eye. "I wish," he whispered, "I wish . . ."

"Why, Davy?" cried Dorfy. Before her very eyes Davy grew smaller and smaller, till he was no larger than Willy, and in a trice she was as tiny as Davy was. Their excited cries changed to faint squeaks—for Davy and Dorfy had turned into little twin mice!

"Put these on," Willy Wishingmouse handed Dorfy a pink bandanna and Davy a blue one. Then he grasped each by the paw and away they scampered down the knothole, along the timber under the floor, and down the alley. The twins were surprised to find they could run along as nimbly as Willy, but the houses and barns looked so big and tall it scared them at first. "Where are we bound for?" Dorfy couldn't help asking, in the strange mouse language that came so easily to her tongue.

"Down back of Main street. One of our scouts reports a new cheese at one of the grocery stores tonight. Hah! Willy stopped short and sniffed the warm night air.

"What's the matter?" asked Davy. "I can't smell anything. Yes, I can, too—it's cheese!" He snatched his little mouse-ear, quite wild over the delicious odor. "So can I!" squeaked Dorfy, "and it's right over there!" Before Willy could stop her, she had darted across to Higgins' grocery, Davy close at her heels. The smell of the cheese had made the twin mice half crazy.

"Danger!" cried Willy. "Wait, wait a minute!" But the twins had already crawled under the loose store door and hurried themselves toward the delicious odor. Nothing could stop them now.

Sobbing and squeaking, Willy followed, but he was too late. Mr. Higgins had set his trap well, and inside, greedily gorging themselves on a lump of toasted cheese, were Davy and Dorfy. They were so excited over the new-found dainty that they had not even noticed that they were caught!

Waiting patiently, Willy Wishingmouse flung himself against the trap, but it held fast. Roused from their feast by the jerk, the twins came to their senses. "Where are we? Oh, where are we?" wailed Dorfy. "Let us out!" squeaked Davy. "Quick!"

"I can't," answered Willy, shaking with fear. "Oh, what have I done? What will Uncle Tick say?"

The little Dorfymouse grabbed the wire bars of the trap in her trembling paws and chewed at them with her shining teeth. "Hish us out, can't you?" "Anything but that," said Willy, sadly. "That's one thing my wish never works on—a mousetrap! I'll have to run and find Uncle Tick."

"Oh, don't leave us," begged the twins, shivering against the cold bars of their cage. But a frightened sob from the lonely street outside was their only answer. Willy Wishingmouse had gone for help!

THE VALUE OF CUMULATIVE ADVERTISING

By W. C. Freeman

(So much has been and is constantly being told about the accumulative advertising, mostly theories calculated to make the advertiser believe that money spent on advertising in infelicitous mediums is well spent. "Cast thy bread upon the waters, in time it will come back." But when you read a talk like this, where not merely a statement is made, not merely an argument, not merely testimony, but real EVIDENCE is furnished, one feels that after all it is more than mere talk. To give credit where credit is due, this is talk number 389 of Brother Freeman in the Mail of April 5th. There is meat in it, and the story is told without much dressing.—EDITOR.)

J. L. Parker and Ralph O. Smith were in the rug business for themselves on Thirty-fourth St., which they gave up to go with Joseph Wild & Co., rug merchants.

They were advertisers—not big—but they were steady advertisers.

They have been with Joseph Wild & Co. for more than a year, yet letters continue to come addressed to Parker & Smith at the old address on Thirty-fourth St., making inquiry about rugs as the result of the advertising they did—and they haven't advertised anything at all for fifteen months!

Mr. Parker told me that, after the lapse of a year, he would send a boy over to their old store occasionally and would say to himself—"Surely there won't be any more letters now," but the boy never comes back without bringing a stack of them.

Does this not illustrate the accumulative effect of advertising?

Mr. Parker said recently that he was convinced that five dollars expended in advertising one year meant that it was worth $10 next year, $15 the next, and so on—that its value multiplied, provided in the first place it was the right kind of advertising, stated facts and was backed up by a house of repute.

Advertising men, in soliciting business, always say to a prospective customer—if they are wise—that immediate results from advertising are not overwhelming, but if it is continued intelligently and persistently, the results are bound to come.

One of the greatest aids to us in soliciting business is the fact that we can prove to customers that the effects of advertising are cumulative.

Men who fail to make advertising pay do not go at it with a determination to keep at it until it succeeds. Just running an advertisement occasionally in newspapers or magazines does not often bring satisfactory returns.

There are exceptions, of course, to this rule, because in the financial district a bond issue is advertised only once or twice or three times, and a new book that is published is advertised perhaps three or four times, but for a mercantile business, that of a manufacturer or a retailer, it is foolish to think of starting an advertising campaign covering a short period.

No concern should, think of, starting an advertising campaign without having fully made up its mind that it will continue for a year, anyway.

The copy used need not necessarily be large, and the expense attached to it need not be very big. Most merchants figure to spend from 1 1/2 to 5 per cent of their gross receipts for advertising.

In the case of Messrs. Parker & Smith, they are able, by reason of the fact that they kept at advertising as long as they were in business, to get trade for the firm they are now with from those people who read their advertising, but who were not ready to buy at the time they read it.

A Cool Little Coat of Checker Mohair.

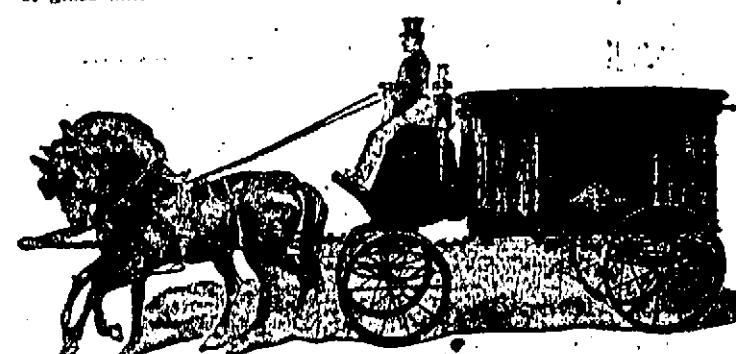

A particularly graceful swing is given to the skirt of this little coat, because of the pleats set in at the bottom which set out smartly above flared little petticoats. The pleats go all around the back of the coat and a blue strap-bolt holds them in place. The coat is made of black and white shepherd check mohair and is lined with scarlet satin, this bright color appearing also on cuffs and collar. The buttons are of scarlet enamel and dull gilt.

Every Day Brings Surprises to the Buyers of White Goods

Hardly a day passes but what women, looking over our stock of beautiful white goods, make some remark about its completeness and the rare values offered here.

Women who have even looked over the stocks in the largest cities say that our stock is not overshadowed and that the qualities at the prices are not equalled.

We buy our white goods only from the largest manufacturers in this country and import direct from abroad. The Big Store's trade extends over such a vast territory that our volume of business is simply tremendous. Every article is bought at the lowest ebb in prices, and because we do not have to pay the high expenses that the big city stores do, we usually sell for less.

For Graduation and Wedding Dresses

The choicest of white goods in almost unlimited assortments are here. SHERETTE, the new 1910 white cloth, in widths 27 to 48 inches, at 15c to 75c yd. Fine Imported Swiss Muslins, in pin-head dots up to those of medium size, in ten different designs, embroidered checks, lace stripes, dainty figures, closely imitating hand embroidery, on the finest muslins, at 25c, 35c, 50c, 60c, 75c, 85c, 95c, $1.00.

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

TO BE human; to admit one's errors to one's self, not divine, but at least one rung up the ladder between man and divinity. Which is by way of introducing a few words on the weakness of self-justification.

Suppose you have done an unkind or thoughtless or selfish thing, and you are faced with it, you defend yourself to your accuser, of course. That's as much a natural instinct as it is to put up your arm to ward off a blow.

There ARE men who have the courage and control and high-mindedness to conquer this instinct, and to review an accusation of themselves as calmly and pass upon it as fairly, as they would upon another man's sin or mistake. But these are rare men.

We can't all do that. But there is one thing we can all do, and that is not be the kind of creature who will never admit their own faults and mistakes even to themselves.

The other day you lost your temper and said a lot of harsh and undesired things to your very good friend. He stood it for awhile and then he lost his, and told you what an ill-tempered brute you were, and you asserted that you were nothing of the sort, and told him all the reasons you had for losing your temper, and what a wonder it was you were able to keep it at all, with anyone as exasperating as he was, around.

And now you are alone and are thinking over that explosion of yours, you can do one of two things. You can wallow in the mire of self-justification and say, "He shouldn't have said what he did about my work." "He is too quick to go off the handle." "He has said much worse things to me and I have just told him to go as far as he liked." "He hasn't been treating me squarely lately, anyway."

Or you can face your fault fairly and squarely and say: "I don't wonder he called me an ill-tempered brute. I was. I've got the worst temper this side of the Mississippi."

Tell me which of these two you do and I will tell you whether you are the kind of man who grows in character with the years or not.

The basis of all development is the admission of faults and mistakes. The man who continually roars a series of cowardly self-justifications between himself and his faults can't develop any more than a plant can develop screened from the sun.

Next time you have committed a fault or made a mistake and you are reviewing it in your mind, why don't you try, instead of following your natural instinct to justify yourself, to take a new tack and try to judge yourself as justly as if you were thinking of the case of a third person.

Voters wrote in the names of former Senator Foraker, former Governor Herlick, former Interior Secretary Carlisle and others. Most of the renominated congressmen and successful Republican candidates are pledged against Speaker Cannon's reelection. Nicholas Longworth was nominated in the first district.

MAKING THE WORLD GOOD.

By MARY RUSSELL.

To take away the widest pleasure of the people is not enough.

To close the saloon, to shut the door of the theater, to banish the low dance halls will not make men decent. To tear down is only part of the work the reformer has to do.

To take an open knife out of a child's hand by force does not convince the child that the knife is dangerous. The only lesson you have a greater or power than he.

So with the reformer who really desires the good of the lower classes. The saloon will be closed by law of men, but there will be left men and women who recognize that they are closing the only place of amusement open to certain classes of men.

These will open up clubs for men in place of the saloons. Rooms well warmed, well furnished, well lighted, where coffee or tea or milk may be bought. Games will be furnished. If the promoters of these enterprises are wise they will put in billiards and pool and a bowling alley, as well as card tables and domino and checker games.

The same small charge that would be made by saloons should be made. Free amusements and games are charity—and charity is an open door to dependence.

Have plenty of places where men may wash. Bathing is one of the needs to self-respect. And, newspapers and magazines lying invitingly about may serve as a lure down unknown paths to a desire for better things.

For the young people there should be halls provided, with good music, where, under proper supervision there could be dancing in its innocent form. An ice cream soda fountain instead of a bar, would do a thriving business. Gymnasiums for boys and girls, with swimming tanks and athletic equipment will be aids to health as well as to morals.

To these might be added manual training departments with many classes reaching out into all branches for better education and greater power. And for the women—what will the practical philanthropist do for her?—Please—your work-worn women, who have lost their taste for the joy of life—do they have they drink of the bitter—what can be done for them?

Well, I would entertain them. Make life more full of joy if I could. I would have a room with trained attendants, and milk and bread and butter, where they might drop the last little burden that God has placed in their arms. They might go into big comfortable rooms and be entertained. I would not preach at them too much. I would not try too hard to elevate their taste in music or art.

They should have rag time, if they wanted it, and the old folk tunes and songs of the land they know as children. The pictures on the walls should tell a story plainly, not wrapped in a mystical metaphor of color.

And the plays to be presented on the stage would be selected from the simplest direct heart stories of melodrama—for such are loved and understood by the people.

I'd let in the light of God's sunshine on these darkened lives. Their ways would be better because they would be happier—for happy people have no desire to evil.

Some day there will come the wealthy philanthropist who will try his plan and the simplicity of it will amaze those who have for so long striven to make good people by force. Make them happy—God will make them good.

BEAUTIFUL SIMPLICITY.

A marvelously simple but effective frock in rose crepon. The whole treatment of the gown, as the dainty dresden, is quite new, the upper part of the skirt being ingeniously tucked to create a striking silhouette, a double line of openwork stitch defining the center front, punctuated with buttons. This openwork again forms a distinctive note in connection with the corsage, which is set on to a long-shouldered finely tucked yoke, completed at the throat with a falling collar of black tulle. Despite the apparent simplicity, it is all extremely clever, every detail having been placed with a sure hand.

A 'CROSS COUNTER TALK

Customer: "What constitutes good paint?" Dealer: "Good paint depends on the materials used, the processes of manufacture, and the skill of the paint maker—no more, no less."

"Sherwin-Williams Paint, Prepared, is good paint—the best paint, in fact, that can be made. No care or detail is lacking in its manufacture. The materials employed are of the highest quality and are properly put together by experienced paint makers. The linseed oil—the vital part of paint—used in S.W.P. is made especially by The S.W. Co. in their own mill. The pigments are selected with greatest care and scrupulously tested. The tinting colors are products of the Company's own dry color works. And the mills used for grinding and mixing are designed and made in the machine shops of the Company. They embody the most advanced ideas in paint making. With such high quality materials, such care and attention, S.W.P. must be and is good paint all the way through."

THEATER

Musical Comedy Hard Work, But Blanche Wouldn't Star.
"When a person's in musical comedy they earn their money, I can tell you," panted Blanche Deyo ungrammatically but with unlimited fervor as she dashed into the hot little dressing room and with the help of her maid struggled out of one costume and dashed into another. "There,

Julie, put on my shoes while I touch up my make-up. Hot! my goodness—you'll excuse me, dear"—turning to her visitor—"If I seem to talk in fits and starts, but I'm changing constantly and we'll have to conversationalize piece-meal, as it were."

The time was a Wednesday afternoon matinee and the place was the Princess Theatre, Chicago, where Miss Deyo plays the loveliest little immigrant girl in "Miss Nobody From Starland." Having heard something of the trials and tribulations of the musical comedy favorite, one called upon Miss Deyo for the express purpose of ascertaining beyond a reasonable doubt as to whether such and so were true. It was! Musical comedy is no fun for the people in front who have nothing to do but clap their hands and laugh, but for the people that cause the laughs and are responsible for the clapping it's downright hard work and is not far removed as it might be from drudgery. "I make six changes, and hurry ones, too," said Miss Deyo, "and you know that's no fun. You work hard on the stage and it would be good to be able to come to one's dressing room and take a few long breaths and sort of gain one's equilibrium in between times, but no such thing as that for me or most people in musical comedy for that matter. It's a time of work, work, work, while you're on the stage, with a chorus of "get-into-your-duds" and "get-out-of-your-duds" when you're off. Nobody stays in musical comedy for the sheer delight of it, no indeed! Not but what we like it, we are all just as interested as we can be, but it's because we like to make good and have people like us, not because we're struck a soft snap, I should say not! And there's money in it, too. You know, doing straight dramatic work there's no money unless you're a star or featured. You've got to be known and your name has got to be worth something to a manager in order to get anything like what you would make in musical comedy."

"Would you care to do dramatic work if you would be starred?" came the rather insane question.
"Who would not?" Miss Deyo, it transpired, would not. "I wouldn't be a star," she said, "unwillingly her lips generously with tongue. 'I'd have to have a splendid company with a good star, if there was money in it, but that is all I would do.' This business of being starred isn't what it looks to be, you're always on parade, so to speak. If you're noted for a beautiful mouth you must always keep your mouth in one position for four that a representative of the press, most likely, would see when you had relaxed it and the him to his paper to put in cold hard print what a horrible mouth you had when nobody was looking. Then you have made a bit of a mistake. If you have made a bit of a mistake in the lifting of an eyebrow or something of the kind—you have always to remember that. Then no matter how you really may be feeling you must always appear to feel the same when you are starring in a play. Perhaps you are riotously happy over a perfectly good new baby that has come to your brother's house and you want to squeal and talk baby talk and make donkeys of your thumbs, but you do it! Have to go on the stage in a Vampire makeup and do the misery acts to a three hour misery of an audience who have come to have their feelings racked or vice versa. Somebody's dead or your gold watch has been stolen and you don't want anything on earth so much as to be able to get off into a corner by yourself and weep, and what you have to do is to make up into a little frivolous white doll and to flirt around and talk nonsense. None of that for mine, I prefer musical comedy where I have a good part but where I am not so much after all. Do you get the point? Whether one did or not, Miss Deyo could not wait to see but was gone in a jiffy and the dressing room thereof knew her no more. "Miss Nobody From Starland" will be seen here at Myers Theatre on Thursday, May 19.

HALLEY'S COMET NEAR THE EARTH

OLD WORLD WILL BORE THROUGH GASEOUS TAIL THIS AFTER-NOON.

AURORA AT DAWN, PERHAPS

Halley Star is Now About 14,000,000
Miles Away But It Will Soon Begin to Recede Rapidly—No Harm Anticipated.

Washington, May 18.—Some time this afternoon, probably well toward evening, the earth and the tail of Halley's comet will rush hurtling together in space with a velocity inconceivably greater than the speed of any projectile. It will then be nearest the earth, a distance of approximately 14,000,000 miles.

After today the comet will rapidly recede, but this afternoon the earth will enter the extremely tenuous tail, which sweeps away from the comet for a distance of about 20,000,000 miles, and will not emerge until some time tonight.

No Harm Is Predicted.

The earth will travel more than a million miles through this exceedingly thin tail, and nobody can predict accurately just what phenomena will result, but all astronomers are perfectly sanguine that no harm will come to the earth or its atmosphere, and it is even doubtful whether there will be any manifestations whatever.

The noxious vapors of the tail, if it possesses any, will be unable to penetrate the earth's heavy wrapping of atmosphere and beyond possibly a few aerial fireworks and some auroral illumination of the sky, the comet will glide by without extraordinary incident.

Best Time to See Comet.

On Saturday and Sunday nights just after sunset will be the best time of all to see the comet. It will appear these evenings just south of the point in the western sky where the sun sinks behind the horizon. It will be brighter on these evenings and will then steadily grow dimmer.

Weather forecasters all over the country will keep vigil to determine whether the presence of the comet is affecting the earth's envelope of air.

Dispatches from New Haven, Conn., set forth that while Yale astronomers do not care to be quoted on the scheduled arrival of the astral wanderer, they anticipate no danger to the earth, and say that the brilliance of its passage will be interfered with by a full moon.

Comet Causes Suicide.

Pittsburg, Pa., May 18.—After talking strangely for the past two weeks about Halley's comet, Mrs. Clementine Derenzo killed herself in the home of a friend by shooting.

Negroes Abandon All Work.

Galveston, Tex., May 18.—Thousands of negroes in all parts of Texas are flocking to the towns and gathering in churches, believing that the Halley comet will destroy the earth, and in consequence crops in many sections are suffering in southwest Texas. Three thousand negroes have abandoned the fields and gone into camp meetings.

Drives People to Church.

Norfolk, Va., May 18.—Fear of Halley's comet has done more to drive people to church than all the revivals held in this section in years. At a big tent meeting in South Norfolk each night this week the entire seating capacity of 1,000 was filled and 500 more persons clamored for standing room.

DEMAND RATES BE ARBITRATED

Shippers in Conference Ask Government Ruling on Freight Charges.

Chicago, May 18.—Federal arbitration by the interstate commerce commission of the proposed nation-wide increase in freight rates by American railroads was demanded by the 400 representatives of the great and small shippers of the country in resolutions adopted at the conference held in the Congress hotel. A committee of 17, representative of the entire country, was appointed to seek this conciliatory method of warding off the classified freight rate increase. Failing to bring the railroads to terms by this method, the committee is empowered to take whatever action is deemed necessary to bring about the results sought by the shippers.

Other methods of forcing the railway systems to abandon their threatened rate increases, advanced by various delegates, were: Publicity, a federal injunction, development of competing waterways and political punishment.

DENVER VOTERS ROUT "DRYS."

"Wets" Carry Every Precinct, According to Early Returns of City.

Denver, May 17.—The "wets" have carried Denver by a majority ranging from 7,000 to 10,000. Returns from approximately 60 precincts show that the "drys" failed to carry precincts in wards that went "dry" two years ago, and have thus far not won a single precinct. Returns, however, are slow in coming in.

Kills Wife; Shoots Self.

Kansas City, Mo., May 18.—Henry Holton of this city went to Kansas City, Kan., and shot and killed his wife, Lily. He then turned the weapon upon himself with fatal effect. Holton, who was thirty-five years old, had been separated from his wife.

Deceit.

It is an easy to deceive one's self as it is difficult to deceive others.—
Rochefoucauld.

SHEPARD, LIKE LINK BLASTS WHITE'S STORY

Legislators Make Sweeping Denial of Charge He Was Offered Money for His Vote.

Springfield, Ill., May 18.—Before the Sangamon county grand jury, Henry A. Shepard, representative from Jerseyville, made a sweeping denial of the charges contained in Representative Charles A. White's alleged confession regarding the election of United States senator in the last general assembly.

Mr. Shepard told the jurors under oath that he had no knowledge of any money being used in the senatorial fight in the assembly. He told the jury that he had not received or been promised any money to vote for William Lorimer for senator.

He also declared to the inquisitors that he had not been promised and had not received any money for his vote for or against any bills in the general assembly.

He was asked if he had any knowledge of any other member of the assembly being paid money for their votes for United States senator. He said he had no such knowledge.

He was asked if he had any knowledge of any member being promised or paid money for supporting or opposing any bills. He said he had no such knowledge.

On further questioning he said that he had heard stories in connection with some bills to the effect that money might have been used, but that all he knew was the rumor.

Chicago, May 18.—State's Attorney Wayman sprung another coup in the legislative bribery scandal when he caused the special grand jury to take a recess until May 24. This was a change in the program announced heretofore, for an adjournment of the special inquisition. The prosecutor would not discuss the purpose of this move. It is understood that the recess was decided upon pending disposition of the motion to quash the indictment against Representative Leo O'Neill Brown, who is accused of having paid money for votes in the election of William Lorimer as United States senator.

MAYORS ASSEMBLE AT CAIRO.

Various Subjects Relating to Municipal Affairs Are Discussed.

Cairo, Ill., May 18.—The annual convention of the Illinois Mayors' association opened here today, and will continue through tomorrow. Mayor Joseph E. Paden of Evanston, president of the organization, is in the chair and the chief executives of many cities are present. Everything that looks like politics is being avoided in the discussions, the main topics on the program being as follows: The city health department and sanitation; the building and care of streets, with especial attention to the preservation of streets from damage by automobile traffic; the financial affairs and accounting of cities, and the regulation of public utilities corporations and their charges.

AIR-COOLING FAN

Sheet of Absorbent Material Moistens Its Brezezes.

At first thought it might seem that any sort of fan was an air-cooling fan, but it isn't. The ordinary fan merely agitates the atmosphere and produces an artificial breeze. While the breeze cools it is pleasant, but its effect is not lasting. The fan shown here and designed by a Kansas engineer not only agitates the air, but moistens and therefore cools it. Being really cool, and not merely breezy, the air thus propelled lowers the temperature of the blood and makes the subject more comfortable in every way. This ingenious device consists of a frame with a hand-crank and with the upper part of its two sections, rigid and the other flexible on a hinge. In the center part are textile sheets between which is a sheet of absorbent material which will hold moisture for a long while and evaporate it in the air raised by turning the fan. The gentle fanning of the moist sheets with the absorbent one between will maintain the atmosphere in a remarkable degree.

SEVENTEEN KILLED BY AN EXPLOSION

SEVEN BOILERS IN CANTON (O.)
SHEET MILL BLOW UP.

SCORE, AT LEAST, INJURED

Employees of American Tin Plate Company Are Blown to Fragments and Plant Totally Wrecked by Terrific Blast—Few Escape Unhurt.

Canton, O., May 18.—With a roar that was heard three miles away, a battery of seven boilers at the plant of the American Sheet & Tin Plate company exploded, killing from seven to thirty men and injuring a score or more. Among the injured are a half dozen, who, it is said, will probably die.

Night Superintendent Houston said that he had personal knowledge of there being 17 dead. George Droom, one of the rescuers, said that he helped carry out 15 dead bodies and believes that many more are buried in the debris.

But a Dozen Escape Injury.

Over 100 men were in the mill at the time of the explosion and it is not believed that more than a dozen escaped injury. A large number of these are fatally injured. Seven boilers, of 1,200 horse-power each, exploded simultaneously in an L-shaped addition near the middle of the main mill. All employees connected with that department were blown to atoms, it is believed.

One body was thrown by the force of the explosion through the side of a home a square and a half away from the wrecked plant. The body passed through the house and came out on the other side, it landed on a fence across the street and knocked it down. Body Blown Half a Mile.

Another body was picked up a half mile away from the scene of the explosion. A human hand crashed through the window of the office 75 feet away.

The cause of the explosion is unknown. The boilers were supposed to be in good shape. The men had no warning.

The members of the office force escaped injury. Women and children whose husbands and fathers are supposed to be among the dead or injured, gathered about the wrecked plant, weeping and wringing their hands.

Windows are broken in all houses within a radius of a quarter of a mile. The whole section in the vicinity of the plant is strewn with debris from the mill.

The mill is practically a wreck, the interior being blown to pieces. The shell of one boiler was blown a distance of 600 feet north of the plant.

P. V. McLean, constructing engineer for the Canton Sheet Steel company, just a short distance away, was among the first on the scene. "I personally saw 11 dead workmen," said Mr. McLean. "I helped to dig out the bodies and succeeded in finding two, one of an American and the other of a foreigner."

NOTED CHESS PLAYER IS DEAD.

William Weedon, Who Invented Famous Automaton Breaks Neck.

New York, May 18.—Ajeob, the chess and checker playing automaton of the Eden Museum, has quit business. The wooden figure which for years has mystified thousands by being seemingly unbeatable at chess and checkers will "move" no more, for William Weedon fell downstairs and broke his neck. Ajeob did business as a "sure-enough" automaton until a magician discovered that Ajeob was manipulated by Weedon.

Mr. Calhoun gravely offered her an arm; and so with a rustle of her silks there passed from our lives one unhappy lady who helped to make our map for us.

The baroness herself turned, "ought not to remain," she hesitated. "Madam," said Mr. Calhoun, "we can not spare you yet."

She flashed upon him a keen look. "It is a young country," said she, "but it raises statesmen. You foolish, dear Americans! One could have loved you all."

"Oh, what?" said Dr. Ward, turning to her. "My dear lady, two of us are too old for that; and as for the other—"

He did not know how hard this chance remark might smite, but as usual Helena von Ritz was brave and smiling.

"You are men," she said, "such as we do not have in our courts of Europe. Men and women—that is what this country produces."

"Madam," said Calhoun, "I myself am a very poor sort of man. I am old, and I fall from month to month. I cannot live long at best. What you see in me is simply a purpose—a purpose to accomplish something for my country—a purpose which my country itself does not desire to see fulfilled. It does not reward us. What you may shall be our chief reward."

He had naked, yet here also to accept the thanks of all of us who know the intricacies of the events which have gone forward. Madam, we own you Texas! Texas not yonder lady, but yourself, who first advised of the danger, that threatened us. Here was, after all, a simpler task than yours, because she only matched faith with Van Zandt, representative of Texas, who but faith in neither men, woman nor nation. Had all gone well, we might perhaps have owed you yet more, for Oregon."

"Would you like Oregon?" she asked, looking at him with a full glance of her dark eyes.

"More than my life! More than all my fortune!" His voice rang clear and keen as that of youth.

"All of Oregon?" she asked.

"All? We do not own all! Perhaps we do not deserve it. Surely we could not expect it. Why, if we got one-half of what that fellow Polk is claiming, we should do well enough—that is more than we deserve or could expect. With our army already at war on the southwest, England, as we all know, is planning to take advantage of our helplessness in Oregon."

Without further answer, who held out to him a document whose appearance, at least, recognized.

"I am but a woman," she said, "but I chance that I have been able to do this country perhaps something of a favor. Your assistant, Mr. Trist, has done me in turn a favor. This much I will ask permission to do for him."

Calhoun's long and trembling fingers were nervously opening the document. He turned to her with eyes blazing with anger. "It is Oregon!" He dropped back into his chair.

"Yes," said Helena von Ritz, slowly.

"It is Oregon. It is bought and paid for. It is yours!"

So now they all went over that document, signed by none less than Pakenham himself, minister plenipotentiary for Great Britain. That document exists to-day somewhere in our archives, but I do not feel empowered to make known its full text. I would I had never need to set down, as I have, the cost of it. These others never knew that cost, and now they never can know, for long years since both Calhoun and Dr. Ward have been dead and gone.

I turned aside as they examined the document which within the next few weeks was to become public property. The red wafers which mended it—and which she smilingly explained at Calhoun's demand—were, as I know, not less than red drops of blood.

In brief, I may say that this paper stated that, in case the United States felt disposed to reopen discussion which Mr. Polk's peremptory had closed, Great Britain might be able to listen to a compromise on the line of the forty-ninth parallel. This compromise had three times been offered her by diplomacy of United States under earlier administrations. Great Britain stated that in view of her deep and abiding love for peace and her deep and abiding admiration for America, she would resign her claim of all of Oregon down to the Columbia; and more, she would accept the forty-ninth parallel; provided she might have free navigation rights upon the Columbia. In fact, this was precisely the memorandum of agreement which eventually established the lines of the treaty as to Oregon between Great Britain and the United States.

Mr. Calhoun is commonly credited with having brought about this treaty, and with having been author of its terms. So he was, but only in the singular way which in these foregoing pages I have related. States have their price. Texas was bought by blood. Oregon—ah, we who own it ought to prize it. None of our country is half so full of romance, none of it is half so clean, as our great and bodiless northwest, still young in its days of destiny.

"We should, in time have had all of Oregon, perhaps," said Mr. Calhoun, "at least, that is the talk of these fierce politicians."

"That for this fresh outbreak on the southwest there would have been a better chance," said Helena von Ritz. "But I think, as matters are to-day, you would be wise to accept this compromise. I have seen your own marching, thousands of them, the grandest sight of this century or any other. They give full base for this compromise. Given another year, and your rifles and your plows would make your claims still better. But this is to-day."

"Believe me, Mr. Calhoun," I broke in, "your signature must go on this."

"How now? Why so anxious, my son?"

"Because it is right!"

Calhoun turned to Helena von Ritz. "Has this been presented to Mr. Buchanan, our secretary of state?" he asked.

"Certainly not. It has been shown to no one. I have been here in Washington working—well, working in secret to secure this document for you. I do this—well, I will be frank with you—I do this for Mr. Trist. He is my friend. I wish to say to you that he has been a faithful—"

I saw her face whiten and her lips shut tight. She swayed a little as she stood. Dr. Ward was at her side and assisted her to a couch. For the first time the splendid courage of Helena von Ritz seemed to fail her. She sank back, white, unconscious.

"It is these damned states, John!" began Dr. Ward fiercely. "She has fainted. Here, put her down, and we'll bring her around in a minute. Great Jove! I want her to hear us thank her. It's splendid work she has done for us. But why?"

When, presently, under the ministrations of the old physician, Helena von Ritz recovered her consciousness, she arose, fighting desperately to pull herself together and got back her splendid courage.

"Would you retire now, madam?" asked Mr. Calhoun. "I have sent for my daughter."

"No, no. It is nothing!" she said. "Forgive me, it is only an old habit of mine. See, I am quite well!"

Indeed, in a few moments she had regained something of that magnificent energy which was her heritage. As though nothing had happened, she arose and walked swiftly across the room. Her eyes were fixed upon the great map which hung upon the wall—a strange map which seemed to us to-day. Across this she swept a white hand.

"I saw your man cross this," she said, pointing along the course of the great Oregon Trail—whose detailed path was then unknown to our geographers. "I saw them go west along that road of destiny. I told myself that by virtue of their courage they had won this war. Sometime there will come the great war between your people and those who rule them. The people still will win."

She spread out her two hands top and bottom of the map. "All, all, ought to be yours—from the isthmus to the ice, for the sake of the people of the world. The people—but in this

They will have their own!

We listened to her silently, crediting her enthusiasm to her sex, her race; but what she said has remained in one mind at least from that day to this. Well might part of her speech remain in the minds to-day of people and rulers alike. Are we worthy of the price paid for the country we gained? And when we shall be worth that price, what numerals shall mark our territorial lines?

"May I carry this document to Mr. Pakenham?" asked John Calhoun, at last, touching the paper on the table.

"Please, no. Do not. Only be sure that this proposition of compromise will meet with his acceptance."

"I do not quite understand why you do not go to Mr. Buchanan, our secretary of state?"

"Because I pay my debts," she said simply. "I told you that Mr. Trist and I were comrades. I conceived it might be some credit for him in his work to have been the means of doing this much."

"He shall have that credit, madam, be sure of that," said John Calhoun. He held out to her his long, thin, bloodless hand.

"And that," he said, "I have been mistaken in many things. My life will be written down as failure. I have been unjust. But at least it shall not be said of me that I failed to reverse a woman's such as you. All that I thought of you, that first night I met you, was more than true. And did I not tell you you would one day, one way, find your reward?"

He did not know what he said; but I know, and I spoke with him in the silence of my own heart, knowing that his speech would be the same, were his knowledge even with mine.

"Tomorrow," went on Calhoun, "tomorrow evening there is to be what we call a ball of our diplomacy at the White House. Our administration, knowing that war is soon to be announced in the country, seeks to make a little festival here at the capital. We whistle to keep up our courage. We listen to music to make us forget our consciences. Tomorrow night we dance. All Washington will be there. Baroness von Ritz, a card will come to you."

She swept him a curtsey, and gave him a smile.

"Now, as for me," he continued, "I am an old man, and long ago danced my last dance in public. Tomorrow night all of us will be at the White House—Mr. Trist will be there, and Dr. Ward, and a certain lady, a Miss Elizabeth Churchill, madam, whom I shall be glad to have you meet. You must not fail me, dear lady, because I am going to ask of you one favor."

He bowed with a courtesy which might have come from generations of an old aristocracy. "If you please, madam, I ask you to honor me with your last dance in all my life."

Impulsively she held out both her hands, bowing her head as she did so.

"I am But a Woman," She Said, "But It Chances That I Have Been Able to Do This Country Perhaps Something of a Favor."

to hide her face. Two old gray men, one younger man, took her hands and kissed them.

Now our flag floats on the Columbia and on the Rio Grande. I am older now, but when I think of that scene, I wish that flag might float yet freer; and though the price were war itself, that it might float over a cleaner and a nobler people, over cleaner and nobler rulers, more sensible of the splendor of that heritage of principle which should be ours.

LESSON FROM A "PORKER."
I had the opportunity to examine recently a pig weighing 230 pounds that had been fed till maturity on middlings only and then fattened on corn only. The butcher said that was the only pig he had ever killed whose jaws were not strong enough to support its weight, several of the teeth having pulled out as it was hoisted and appearing remarkably soft. There is plenty of bone forming material in milk, more than the adult needs, but not enough in white bread nor in wheat middlings. There is a full supply in entire wheat and in corn bread, but the best source of supply is oats. Uncooked cabbage and potatoes also contain all the mineral elements of food. The owner said this animal had been remarkably healthy and all its organs were in perfect condition, yet it had lived exclusively upon two articles, much nearer its natural food than the waste from our tables which makes the pig the most diseased of all animals, except man. Omnivorousness is unnatural.

NATURE'S REMEDIES FOR DISEASE.
Nature provides more effective remedies in the roots and herbs of the field than were ever produced from drugs.

Thirty years ago, Lydia E. Pinkham of Lynn, Mass., discovered and gave to the women of the world a remedy made from roots and herbs, which has proved more efficacious in curing women's diseases than any other medicine the world has ever known, and today Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is looked upon everywhere as the standard remedy for women's ills.

FORTY YEARS AGO

Janesville Daily Gazette, May 17, 1870.—(Jottings).—At an early hour yesterday morning, intelligence reached this city that a fire was raging in an extensive wood pile belonging to the C. & N. W. railway at Jefferson. Aid was asked from here, in answer to the call the rotary steam fire engine left soon after on a special train and did good service. The fire originated in a wood yard, and is thought to have been the work of an incendiary. From 1,000 to 1,500 cords of wood were burned, but no buildings. No. 1 steamer arrived at home last night about eleven o'clock after a very hard day's work.

The foreman of the Watertown fire company went home very mad yesterday from the Jefferson fire, because he could not make Foreman Brooks believe that he could throw more water with his hand engine than the steamer could. Watertown ought to have the new insane asylum.

A festival and ball is to be given at the rink next Tuesday evening by the Catholic Literary association. The Janesville convocation of the Episcopal church of this diocese, assembled in Evansville on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

A Shopper gentleman brags of having corn six inches high in his garden. While at Milton last night, waiting for the up bound train, the fireman with No. 1 steamer discovered a bright star at the south and east of the track, all supposing it to be a fire in this city, quite a little excitement was aroused and short minutes in waiting seemed to them like long hours. Soon the train was in motion thundering south, and on passing the crossing the light was discovered to be about a mile and a half south, probably a straw pile—and all excitement fears were at an end.

History of the Beet.
Beets were first found growing wild in sandy soils near the sea in Europe and western Asia. The wild beet still found there is regarded by authority as the original type. This wild beet is slender rooted and has a taste so different from the beet we know today, that one must consider the first man who tasted and thought it possible to develop, but gifts of hope and imagination far beyond ordinary. The beet has been cultivated since 200-300 B. C.

"Cheerfulness."
What, indeed, does that word "cheerfulness" imply? It means a contented spirit; it means a pure heart; it means a kind, loving disposition; it means a generous appreciation of others; and a modest opinion of self.—Thackeray.

Candor.
If anything in my conversation has merited your regard, I think it must be the openness and freedom with which I commonly express my sentiments. You are too wise a man not to know that such freedom is not without its use.—Burke.

Friendship Among Animals.
Amongst animals we find friendship, confidence and fidelity, such as is rare even among those who call themselves humans and men.

Burning Thoughts.
"I understand you told the umpire exactly what you thought of him," said one ball player. "No," replied the other, "only the little I could dig out of my consciousness on the spur of the moment. I've been thinking a lot since then."
